Canada on verge of adopting long-overdue legislation to implement the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples

With only one step remaining in the Parliamentary process, our Nations and organizations are encouraging all Senators to ensure that long overdue federal legislation to implement the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples is now adopted into law.

Bill C-15 will establish an ongoing legal requirement for the federal government to work collaboratively with Indigenous peoples to implement the UN Declaration.

This includes ensuring that Canada's laws are consistent with the minimum standards affirmed in the 2007 Declaration. Bill C-15 also requires cooperative development of a National Action Plan to implement the Declaration through law, policy and programs and for the government to report publicly on the progress made.

These measures are essential to meeting Canada's international human rights obligations and to fulfilling the federal government's many public commitments to fully implement the UN Declaration.

On Monday, the Senate completed a clause by clause reading of Bill C-15. The Bill now needs to be brought to a final vote in the Senate so that it can receive Royal Assent.

The Assembly of First Nations, the Inuit Tapiriit Kanatami and the Métis National Council, among many others, have called for the Bill to be brought to a vote without further amendment to avoid delays that would almost certainly prevent its passage into law. The Coalition supports this position.

The UN Declaration was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly more than 13 years ago, on September 13, 2007, as the minimum global standards for the "survival, dignity and well-being" of Indigenous peoples.

With the unprecedented public attention to harms inflicted on Indigenous peoples by racism, colonialism and other human rights violations, the Coalition for the Human Rights of Indigenous Peoples is urging all Senators to take this opportunity to demonstrate that Canada is ready to embrace a better way forward.
